KARCHER'S DEFENSE.

His Counsel Conclude, on Second Thought, to Swear Some Witnesses.

Karcher Says He Thought His Life Was in Danger When He Fired.

More Evidence That Mrs. Karsher Had Too Intimate Acquaintance With Strange Men.

Evidence That Karcher Was a Peaceful and Inoffensive Man.

The rumors in circulation about the court house yesterday morning, before the criminal court convened, led to the belief that the case of Louis Karcher, who has now been on trial for a week on the charge of killing John W. Grimes, would reach the jury before the close of the day's session, but subsequent developments showed that while there was a good foundation for the report a change of base was made by the defense, and as a re sult the trial is not yet ended. The respective attorneys were early at their tables, and Judge MacArthur had the court open for business promptly at 10 o'clock. Mr. Mackey, counsel for Karcher, stated to the court that "the defendant would offer no testimony, but go to the jury."

This announcement, although expected by some, caused considerable surprise in the chamber, especially among the members of the bar, and there was a divided opinion as to the wisdom of pursuing this course.

Some attorneys regarded it as a serious mistake and likely to further prejudice the take and likely to further prejudice the liberty of the prisoner. Others, seeming to be informed that the government was holding strong rebuttal in reserve, thought the movement a good one to keep this testimony from coming before the jury.

Assistant District Attorney Coyle opened for the government and in reviewing the testimony claimed that the proof sustained the indictment and that the proof sustained the indictment and that the prosecution was justified in asking for a verdict of guilty. Mr. Mackey then arose and said that he believed he was entitled to reply. Judge MacArthur said that it was his turn to address the jury, but that the closing belonged to the governbut that the closing belonged to the govern-ment. Mr. Mackey said he was under the impression that as he had submitted the case without offering any testimony he was en-titled to make the final argument to the jury. If that was not so, then he had made a very grave mistake and periled his client's case. He had thirty-one witnesses present and could not feel justified in submitting the case under the circumstances and asked permission to have the case reopened and his testimony heard.

Judge MacArthur said that, the counsel

Judge MacArthur said that, the counsel having closed his case under a misapprehension, he should allow it to be responed and the witnesses for the prisoner heard. The first witness called was the accused, Louis Karcher. He was very coel on the witness stand, and spoke in broken English. He found some difficulty at times in comprehending the augustions wit to him and pathing his ing the questions put to him and making his answers understood. He testified that he was at home on the 27th of last March, and went to bed about 8 o'clock that night. It was about 11 o'clock when he awoke from some about 11 o clock which he heard a man's voice in his wife's bed room. He could not believe a man was in there, and he listened. Then he became satisfied there was another man in the house beside himself. He got up, put on an old pair of pauts, went to his trunk and got a nisted and went to the droop his wife's room.

pistol and went to the door of his wife's room, which he found fastened, and rapped. She asked, "What do you want?" He said that he wanted to come in, and there was a man in the room. She said, "You are a liar. If there is a man in the house he is a burglar." Finally she let him in. He looked round and went to the closet, which he found looked. He asked for the key. She said she did not know where it was. He said that he knew where te find a key, and went back into his room. He got a key and then want down to the kitchen and got a hatchet. When he got back to the door it was again closed. She refused to let him in, and he battered on the door with the latchet in his left hand and had his pistol in his right hand pocket. It was in doing the pounding that pistol and went to the door of his wife's room, pecket. It was in doing the pounding that he made a miss and cut his finger, which bled afterward. When his wife opened the door he went to the closet, and while trying to put the key in the lock the door was been considered.

witness stepped back, and thinking his life was in danger pulled the pistel and fired at the man three times, as quick as he could. The man stepped back toward the closet, and the witness went down stairs into the street, where he cried "police!" and "murder!" When the officers came he took them up stairs and showed them the man, then handed over the pistel and delivered himself up. After he had been taken to the station house, his wife got into his bed, and when the officers went back to the house they found her there with only one garment on. The witness denied telling Sergt. Mulihall, after the shooting, that he had his revenge. Witness had been told that his wife had bad habits, but when he asked the people if they knew what she had done they would say, "so and so told me so and so." He wanted proof of her wrong doing as he was loth to believe what was said about her. Once he found a man named Tom Clark on the stairway in his house and put him out. He married his wife on Jan. 28, 1879, at the house of Mr. L. Schmidt, on Sixth street, between Pennsylvania avenue and C street, and Mr. Schmidt and his son witnessed the marriage. His wife was an unlearned weman when he married her. He did what he could to educate her, and employed a lady to teach her. He recollected the night he refused to let her in the house. Early that evening she said that she was going to one of the neighbors, and he told her not to stay late. He waited until after 10 o'clock for her and then went to hed.

sale was going to one of the negative and he told her not to stay late. He waited until after 10 o'clock for her and then went to bed. When she came he was mad because she had stayed out so late, and to punish our for disabeling him he would not let her in, and told beying him he would not let her in, and told her to go back where she had been. A hout two years ago he had found she was drinking, and was compelled to advortise for people not to trust her for liquor. He had sworn, when he married her, to take her for better or worse, but he did not believe in the worse. He was in the habit of spending his evenings as home, and had not been out worse than as these for and had not been out more than six times for five years. He drank beer, and could drink twelve or feurteen bottles an evening and got up at 6 o'clock in the morning feeling all got up at 6 o clock in the morning feeling all right. He pronounced the testimony of Andrew Robey that he offered him his wife to be "a downright lie." He told Mullhall and Redway that he had beard of his wife carrying on with other men. If he had known it to be a fact he would not have lived in the house-with her. The cross-examina-tion did not shake the direct testimony of the witness and nothing new was brought out

JABOUT DRUMMERS' LICENSES.

A Delegation of Merchants Call on Senator Ingalls-Mr. Skinner's Charges. A delegation of business men called upon Chairman Ingalls, of the senate district committee, yesterday, in relation to the commercial tax. Mr. Barbour, for the merchants, recommended that the bill introduced by Mr. Barbour in the house be substituted for the section stricken out of the house bill. Mr. Barbour's bill imposes a tax of $100 per year on commercial agents and sample drummers, and is very comprehensive in its scope, definand is very comprehensive in its scope, defining every person who sells by card, catalogue, that it shall not be assignable or transferable.

A penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $300 is affixed for failing to take out license.
This bill the committee representing the merchants want inscribed in the police regulation bill in place of the section relating to taxing drummers, which the senate subcommittee has decided to strike out of the house bill relating to police regulations, the sections mittee has decided to strike out of the house bill relating to police regulations, these ctions imposing a tax on commercial agents. Mr. Ingalis told the merchants that the whole matter would be thoroughly considered before any action was taken.

Representative Skinner, of New York, said yesterday in reference to the commissioners' yesterday in reference to the commissioners letter asking for information about certain charges he made in his speech on the police bill some time ago, that he had proof of the authenticity of the charge. He would not tell the source of his information, but said that a gentleman had told him that by paying $5 for a little card drommers would be protected and avoid the payment of the $200 tax.

Mr. Skinner said he was not hestile to Washington merchants but was conceased to very ington merchants, but was opposed to re-stricting other merchants from coming here, and if this city is to have a license it should be enforced.
